NILES BOY WRITES OF CAMP LIFE

G. W. Wright Praises People of Niles and Hayward for Favors.

Sacramento Cal., 6-29-16.
Editor Township Register,
Dear Sir:

"Thinking that the people of Niles and Washington township might be interested in hearing from its representatives in this unit of Uncle Sam's Army, I am sending you a few remarks on my observations since enlisting.

"The first four days after the call were spent in recruiting and equipping the Company. I was put on detail in the recruiting office, which was opened by Second Lieutenant Phillips and Corporal McCord.

"The enlistments at Niles were voluntary and spontaneous. Out of a population of 1500 there were eight who enlisted in Company H and one previous enlistment in Company I Fifth Infantry. Company H paraded the streets of Niles and were given a warm reception and shown the deepest respect and consideration by the people of Niles and Washington township; and the boys of Company H and the Fifth Regiment entertain the highest regard for the people and the support given them.

"The trip to Sacramento was uneventful except for having our pictures taken and the cheering we received at Fortieth and Shafter streets, Oakland, and the animals we observed along the route of the O. A. E. There were badgers, jack rabbits, coyotes, etc., resembling a moving picture of a menagerie.

"Upon arriving at Sacramento, June 25th, at 6 o'clock p. m., we marched into the fair grounds and were heartily cheered by the soldiers and civilians. We pitched "dog tents" for the night, and the next day established camp. We put up our Sibley Conical tents. They house comfortably twelve men. We filled our mattresses with new straw and made things homelike generally.

"The next day we were all lined up at the field hospital quarters and vaccinated against typhoid and smallpox. The next twenty-four hours we were sick with headaches and were a very dopy bunch; but being young and homely, we recovered our spirits and also our appetites rapidly. We were granted leave of absence one evening, which we spent sightseeing.

"Yesterday we heard for the first time the roar of the field artillery, which fired a salute upon the arrival of Governor Johnson to inspect it before its departure for the border.

Five troops of cavalry left yesterday mid the cheering of thousands. Excitement ran high last night in camp. There was singing and cheering, and not a man but was eager to go forward and do his duty, and show the world that we are ready to let our veins run dry if needs be to vindicate our honor and uphold those principles of justice and humanity for which the U. S. A. has always stood.

"The bands play in the evening. There is no end to the musical talent in the various regiments. The boys resemble a large, happy family. There is no discord. They are always laughing, playing, singing, boxing, wrestling and indulging in other amusements to help vary the monotony of camp regulation.

"We are certainly proud of the manner in which we were treated by Hayward people. We were given a banquet; had everything we wanted to eat and drink, with speaking from the leading citizens. Almost daily there is donations of various articles arrive from Hayward. Yesterday there arrived enough cigars to furnish each of the Company a good smoke, and a liberal supply left over. Besides this we received peaches, oranges, apples, cantaloupes and watermelons, and the Meninger & Eschelsen cigar store sent us $100 cash to buy extras with. We are certainly very grateful for it for now we can have butter and cream. We all feel very grateful to the people of Hayward.

There is not a man goes to the front but what feels that if war is forced upon us we can depend on the people of Hayward and Niles to back us up to the limit of their ability.

We also go forward to do all we can to justify the confidence placed in us by our people, and to accomplish our object so that the married men will not be called for duty.

Here's to dear old Niles Hayward and victory, and glorious honor for Company H and the flag of the U. S. A.

"I am honored by the title of Private G. W. Wright, better known by comrades as "Kelly."

G. W. WRIGHT.

MAN KILLED VETERINARIAN IN CARD GAME FOR COUNTY NEAR SUNOL MAY BE NAMED

Difference Between 60 Cents and $1.50 Is Cause of Tragedy.

George Barnett, a laborer, employed on the construction of the Spring Valley Water Company's dam near Sunol, was shot and almost instantly killed Wednesday by Compton Vaughan, believed to be the husband of Kate Compton Vaughan, a New Orleans writer. The shooting followed a quarrel that grew out of a poker game.

The tragedy took place at the Spring Valley camp near the new dam. Barnett and Vaughan concluded their Fourth of July celebration with a game of poker, and when it broke up started to quarrel.

Vaughan declared that he had won $1.50 while Barnett maintained that the debt was only 60 cents. The men first resorted to their fists and then started to wrestle. Then Vaughan seized a gun and fired two shots, both of which took effect in Barnett's abdomen.

Vaughan was overpowered by fellow workmen, who held him until the arrival of Constable Larkin Locke of Pleasanton, who took Barnett to the county hospital and Vaughan to the jail.

In a dying statement Barnett identified Vaughan as his assailant and said that the two had quarreled over the amount due on a poker game.

Vaughan was intoxicated when he reached the county jail. He said he was a Princeton graduate and that he had killed Barnett. He said Barnett owed him $1.50, but was only willing to pay him 60 cents.

In Vaughan's pockets were press notices on articles and books written by Mrs. Katie Compton Vaughan of New Orleans who is believed to be his wife.

He is believed to be prominently connected in the South. Efforts to obtain a confession will be made as soon as he recovers consciousness.

Cattlemen of County Want Officer Appointed in Interest of Livestock.

Stockraisers of Alameda county are awaiting with interest the decision of the committee appointed by the Farm Bureau as to whether a veterinary should be appointed by the county for the purpose of protecting stock from epidemics of disease.

There have been no serious outbreaks of disease among stock or dairy cattle in this county and there has been no necessity of establishing of a quarantine at any time. Many stockraisers, however, think it would be best to be on the safe side by appointing a veterinary, who would be at the immediate call of anyone needing his services. It is probable that in the event a veterinary is appointed his headquarters will be in the Livermore district, where most of the stock is raised.

There are, however, large quantities of stock, especially dairy cattle, raised in other sections of the county. According to statistics prepared by Farm Adviser C. W. Rabel, there are 4400 dairy cattle which are kept on fifty farms in Alameda county. The principal dairy cattle centers are Newark, Mt. Eden, Mission San Jose, Hayward, Irvington, Alvarado, San Leandro, San Lorenzo and Livermore.

REQUIRE REST FROM LABOR

Men Make Mistake When They Keep Their "Noses Too Close to the Grindstone."

"Keeping one's nose close to the grindstone" is a popular phrase which describes what a great many people think is the most efficient way of accomplishing any given task. According to this idea, the most work can be done in the quickest time by keeping everlastingly at it with just as few interruptions as possible.

Science now believes that it's all a mistake to keep one's nose too close to the grindstone. Careful studies made in a large number of manufacturing establishments led to the conclusion that the most work is done with the least risk of accident only when a man gives his mind and body frequent opportunities for rest.

Records kept in English factories where men are engaged in soldering tins show the amount of work done during each hour of the day to be as follows:

In the morning—first hour, 114 tins; second hour, 167; third hour, 159; fourth hour, 157; fifth hour, 138.

In the afternoon—first hour, 119; second hour, 165; third hour, 163; fourth hour, 155.

These tables agree with those of other factories in giving a higher output for the second hour than for the first, this being due to the facility which comes with practice.

But the chief point which they drive home, when studied in connection with the number of accidents is that after the second hour of continuous effort, both morning and afternoon, there is a continuous and marked decrease in the output and a corresponding increase in the frequency of accidents. The factory owner who wants to get the most out of his employees will break up their work day by frequent periods of rest.

In this investigation it was impossible to record the cumulative effects of fatigue from day to day, and from week to week, but there was evidence that the physiological products of fatigue cannot be got rid of in a working day. This means a growing predisposition to disease and to the form of mental excitement which results in social unrest.

From Bad to Worse.

Henry Guy Carleton, wit, journalist and playwright, stuttered and was not sensitive about it.

When the Fifth avenue theater burned Mr. Carleton appeared in a newspaper office where he was then employed. The usual Saturday night confusion was greatly increased by the fire. The office was bedlam. Ballard Smith, managing editor of the paper, was bellowing his orders with all his wonderful vigor in the effort to get to press on time.

"M-m-mister Smith," began Mr. Carleton, "I've a g-g-great s-story about the F-f-fifth Avenue theater f-fire."

"Great heavens, man!" roared Smith. "Don't stop to talk to me about it. Don't you know this is Saturday night, and we go to press in fifteen minutes? Get to work and write it, and write as fast as you know how. I want copy, not conversation. Don't you know every minute is precious?"

"Y-y-yes, sir," said the other, with an insistent effort to hold the editor's attention, "but I w-w-want to k-k-know if you w-w-would lend me your s-s-stenographer."—Everybody's Magazine.

Not Much as Boys.

When parents get discouraged over the lack of study and the frequent eccentricities that their boys manifest, or even over their physical misfortunes or poverty, they ought to find hope and consolation in the thought that Isaac Watts was constantly scolded for his absolute indifference to books and boys' sports; Charles Darwin showed such an eccentric tendency to absent-mindedness that on one of his lonely tramps he walked off an embankment and nearly lost his life; Ralph Waldo Emerson was a hopeless dreamer; the great Demosthenes was a fearful stammerer; Abraham Lincoln, Elihu Burritt, Charles Dickens and Andrew Carnegie were the poorest of poor children; Anthony Trollope, the writer, was hopelessly shy and the butt of his school; Audubon of bird fame was put down by all his elders as a fool; Caesar and Napoleon were epileptics; Oliver Goldsmith was a hopeless slob, and Thoreau was adjudged by everyone to be a crank. The queer boy does not always grow to be a man of no worth.—Selected.

Dostoevski's Answer.

In the doctrine that each is responsible for all, that suffering is a purifying discipline, and may be vicarious as well as personal, and that through such a discipline man may find God, is the answer of Dostoevski, the Russian novelist, to the riddle of the ages.

The words he put into the lips of Father Zossima may be taken as summing up his message to mankind:

"Brothers, have no fear of men's sin. Love a man even in his sin, for that is the semblance of divine love, and is the highest love on earth.

"Loving humility is marvelously strong, the strongest of all things, and there is nothing else like it."

SIR ROGER CASEMENT FOUND GUILTY AND IS SENTENCED TO BE HANGED

London.—Viscount Reading, Lord Chief Justice of England, pronounced the sentence of death for high treason on Sir Roger Casement shortly before 5 o'clock Thursday afternoon, June 29, half an hour after the foreman of the jury gave the verdict of guilty. An appeal will be taken.

Sir Roger addressed the court, reading his final statement, with the explanation that he wished it might reach a much larger audience than the one before him, and particularly the people of America, from whom had come many messages of sympathy to him and whose own struggle for liberty, he said, always had been an inspiration to Irishmen.

Sir Roger's auditors, among whom were Viscount Bryce and many other prominent men and women, listened in deepest silence, some moved to tears.

The prisoner said he did not regard trial by Englishmen in an English court as a trial by his peers, to which he was entitled. He reviewed recent events in Ireland from the beginning of the formation of the Ulster volunteers, and said:

"We have seen the Constitutional army refuse to obey the Constitutional Government, and we were told the first duty of Irishmen was to enter that army. Small nations were to be the first consideration, and I saw no reason why Ireland should shed any blood for any people but her own.

"If that is treason, I am not ashamed to avow it here. If the Unionists chose the road they thought would lead to the good side, I knew my road led to the dark side. Both of us proved right. So I am prouder to stand here in a prisoner's dock than to fill the place of my accusers.

"Self-government is our right. It is no more a thing to be withheld from us or doled out to us than the right to life or light, to sunshine or spring flowers."

There were many striking sentences in Sir Roger's speech.

"There is an objection, possibly not good in law, but surely good on moral grounds," he said, against the application to me here of this old English statute, 565 years old, that seeks to deprive an Irishman today of his life and honor, not for adhering to the King's enemies, but for adhering to his own people.

"When this statute was passed in 1351, what was the state of men's minds on the question of a far higher allegiance, that of man and his God to his kingdom? The law of that day did not permit him to forsake his church or deny his God save with his life. The heretic then had the same doom as the traitor.

"Today a man may forswear God and his heavenly realm without fear of punishment, all earlier statutes having gone the way of Nero's edicts against the Christians; but that constitutional phantom, the King, can still dig up from the dungeons and torture chambers of the dark age a law which takes a man's life and limb for obeying his conscience.

"If true religion rests on love, it is equally true that loyalty rests on love. The law I am charged under has no parentage in love, and claims that allegiance of today on the ignorance and blindness of the past.

"I am being tried, in truth, not

CALIFORNIAN RELEASED FROM MEXICAN PRISON

San Francisco, June 30.—Harloe H. Hamilton, former University of California man and until recently manager of the Hacienda Santa Gertrudis plantation, State of Oaxaca, Mexico, has been liberated from jail, according to advices received here last night. Hamilton was arrested and sentenced to death several weeks ago on the charge that in 1912 he was guilty of shooting two bandits who attacked the hacienda. His incarceration prompted the United States Government to investigate his arrest and conviction. According to telegraphic advices received here last night, James Linn Rodgers, special agent of the United States Government in Mexico City, yesterday received word that Hamilton had been released with the proviso that he leave Oaxaca immediately for Vera Cruz. Hamilton has been in Mexico since 1905. He is a graduate of the Mission High School of this city. A sister, Mrs. Helen A. Harold, resides at 151 Valencia street.

Rather.

"Has rather a weak chin, hasn't he?"

"Hasn't enough chin to rest a cigarette against."

by my peers of the living present, but by the fears of the dead past; not by the civilization of the twentieth century, but by the brutality of the fourteenth; not even by a statute written in the language of the land that tries, but in a language of an enemy people, so antique is the law which tries an Irishman who puts loyalty first.

"Loyalty is a sentiment, not a law. It rests on love, not on restraint. The government of Ireland by England rests on restraint, not on law, and since it demands no love it can evoke no loyalty."

With a sweeping gesture of his arm and with more feeling than he had shown before, Sir Roger continued:

"How would all men here feel?"—his voice broke—"how would you feel if an Englishman had landed in England and had been taken to Ireland, if that man had been placed before a jury in a community inflamed against him, believing him to be a criminal?"

Throwing aside his manuscript, Sir Roger said:

"My Lords, I have done. Gentlemen of the jury I wish to thank you for your verdict. I meant no reflection upon you when I said this was not a trial by my peers."

Then the prisoner shook hands with a friend who was sitting below the dock while the usher placed the black cloths over the heads of the Judges. The voice of the Chief Justice was firm, but his face was pale as he spoke the few words in pronouncing the sentence. He began:

"Roger David Casement, you have been found guilty by a jury of your peers of high treason, the highest crime known to the law," and concluded by sentencing him to "be hanged by the neck until you are dead."

The prisoner, leaning on the iron frame, black beard and deep, flashing eyes, was easily the most distinguished figure in the court except Viscount Reading. As the Judge pronounced the sentence Casement smiled. Then a warden touched his arm and he withdrew behind the green curtain from what may be his last appearance before the public.

Sir Roger received the sentence with the utmost composure, smiling at friends in the courtroom.

After Sir Roger had been sentenced, Daniel J. Bailey, the private soldier who had been held as his accomplice, was placed in the dock. The Chief Justice directed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, and Bailey was discharged.

It was announced that the crown had withdrawn the charge against him. The Attorney-General said Bailey had affirmed he joined the Irish brigade with the object of returning to his country and rejoining the army. Under the circumstances no evidence would be produced against him.

Michael Francis Doyle of Philadelphia, of counsel for Sir Roger, gave the following statement:

"The verdict, though regrettable, to us, was not a surprise. We will take an immediate appeal to the Criminal Court of Appeals and then to the House of Lords, if necessary, because we feel that the point of law involving a statute 500 years old under which Sir Roger was tried, never has been legally tested.

San Rafael.—Alfonso G. Fernandez, a Sausalito merchant, drove his automobile over a twenty-foot embankment near Tocaloma Thursday morning, June 29, and, although he was pinned under the car until aid was summoned from a mile away, the extent of his injuries was a slight gash in the chin from broken glass. Another fire today destroyed twenty-five automobiles and the building of the Lone Star Motor Company with an estimated loss of $50,000. Several days ago another motor company was destroyed with a similar loss and several fires in downtown buildings have been extinguished since then before they gained any large headway.

Nogales, Ariz., June 29.—A definite agreement that general hostilities in this district would not be set in motion by such local events as the clash between American and Mexican soldiers here Tuesday night was reached today between Colonel W. H. Sage, United States commander, and General Norzagaray, commander of the Mexican garrison in the Nogales zone. The conference was held in the Mexican consulate here, General Norzagaray crossing the line for the purpose. "It is now definitely understood," Colonel Sage said, "that in this district there will be no battle until the word has been received from Washington and Mexico City respectively."

El Paso.—Amid the screaming of horns of the American motorcycle squadron, the cheers of the motorcycle troopers and the infantry and the yells of several thousand civilians, there returned to American soil this afternoon the tattered remnant of Troop C and Troop K of the Tenth United States Cavalry. GERMAN

Berlin, June 29.—The official statement today says:

"Western front: The same conditions prevail along the British front and the north wing of the French front as have existed during the last few days. Attacks by enemy patrols and strong infantry detachments as well as gas attacks, have become numerous.

"Everywhere the enemy was repulsed. Waves of gas have given no results. Artillery fighting attained great intensity at certain points.

"North of the Aisne and in the Champagne, between Auburive and the Argonne, the French kept up a lively fire. Here also weak attacks were easily repulsed.

"Northwest of the Thiaumont works there were minor infantry engagements.

"Eastern front. Russian attacks, made by some companies between Dubatowka and Smorgon, failed under our curtain of fire.

"Near Guesitschi, southeast of Ljubitscha, a German division (detachment) stormed an enemy point of support east of the Niemen, taking two officers and fifty-six men prisoners and capturing two machine guns and two mine throwers."

The official Austrian report yesterday says:

"Russian front: Near Kutly the enemy failed, as on previous days, in repeated attacks. Southwest of Novo Poczayel, five Russian night attacks were repulsed. A strong Russian attack west of Torozyn broke down.

"West of Sukul German troops stormed Linewka farm and several other positions.

"Italian front: The Italians made attacks in several places on the front between the Adige and the Brentasi. All were repulsed with heavy losses for the enemy."

tile trenches were much damaged in many places. The intermittent discharge of smoke and gas has aroused the activities of the enemy's guns and caused him to disclose his battery positions."

Youthful Lines in Summer Coats

Those who are gifted with the faculty for creating styles must also be able to adapt styles to women of various ages. They contrive to interpret them in many ways, so that garments bespeak youthful or older wearers. In the picture two coats are shown. The checked model leaves no doubt in the mind that it is suited to and made for a young woman. The coat of covert cloth is not quite so decided in character.

These coats are recommended to meet the general needs of every day for young women. The checked model is in black and white, bordered and banded with black satin. The rolling collar is faced with satin. White celluloid buttons banded with black in three sizes are used for decoration and for fastening the coat. The model fits the figure vaguely above the waistline and is generously wide below. The front sets trimly with the fullness at the sides and back, held in place by a belt of satin, and the checked material. In the model of covert cloth the sleeves are cut in one with the body of the coat and the garment is hardly more definite in adjustment to the figure than a shawl. The collar is very high at the back and is faced with taffeta silk. It has an open throat. There could hardly be a better selection than this for a coat which must answer for all sorts of wear. It is good for the street or the car. It is severely plain, with no purely ornamental features, and depends for distinction upon original and clever lines and nicety of machine stitching. By these simple means it manages an elegance that is apparent in the picture and promises a busy career.

Designers have already turned their thoughts to coats for fall and winter, so that we may expect no further innovations in styles for this summer.

Train Is Growing.

The train is gradually growing wider and longer. From a mere panel of tulle or silk, attached to the shoulders and having no relation whatever to the frock, it has become incorporated with the skirt, or as a mantel-like drape of voluminous proportions.

In many instances the overskirt of a gown is extended at each side to form long points which trail behind like a double train when milady walks. These points are trimmed with tassels or ornaments of metal or beads.

Bath-Towel Combing Jacket

Nothing more pretentious than a big bath towel and heavy mercerized cotton yarn are needed to make a pretty combing jacket like that shown in the picture. These practical and familiar things of sturdy quality are wrought into many articles for personal use and for furnishings. The bedroom slippers shown with the jacket are crocheted of mercerized yarn, and the two make the sort of gift that one friend likes to receive from another.

A long bath towel with blue and black broken stripes on a white ground was chosen for the jacket pictured. It is a very simple matter to convert a towel into a jacket. The towel is folded crosswise at the middle of its length, and a slash six inches long cut for the neck. A slit is cut from this neck opening to the bottom of the towel to form the front opening. All the raw edges are finished with a hem a half-inch wide.

The mercerized cotton yarn used for the crocheted edge matches the blue stripe in the towel in color. Wide lingerie ribbon, in blue satin with a small figure, is used to make the bows that tie the fronts and back of the jacket together under the arms. Ties of the same ribbon are used for the fastening at the front. When the jacket is worn the edges below the neck are turned back to form revers.

The uppers for the slippers are crocheted with close-set firm stitches and sewed to the soles with silk thread. They are finished with bows of ribbon like that on the jacket. In slippers and jackets of this kind there is much comfort, for they are durable and practical and dainty as well.

Petticoated Lights for Boudoir.

Instead of dignified candles on the dresser now, there are two cleverly arranged electric lights, each one concealed beneath the frilly skirts of a little doll-lady togged out in appropriate Watteau style, or Eugene style, if one prefers. Two of these little dolls, dressed in ruffled pink silk skirts, and poke bonnets with nodding roses, stand guard over the electric lights that illumine the dresser in a charming boudoir. The glow of the light through the pink petticoats is alluring.

Dark Dresses or Suits.

Dark dresses or suits can be cleaned beautifully by this method: Boil a number of ivy leaves until the water becomes almost black; when cold lay the clothes on a table and brush all over with the liquid, press with a hot iron.

BEST DIET FOR CHILD

ADVICE OF SPECIALISTS OF BUREAU AT WASHINGTON.

Preparations of Meat, Fish, Eggs, and Meat Substitutes Recommended—Almost Innumerable Variety of Stews is Possible.

The following directions for the use of meat, fish, eggs, and meat substitutes in the diet of a child three to six years of age are taken from Farmers' Bulletin No. 717, "Food for Young Children," prepared by specialists of the office of home economics, United States department of agriculture.

Broiling and roasting are the best methods of preparing tender meat. Tough meat should be stewed or prepared in a fireless cooker, or first chopped and then broiled. It is very important to teach the very young child to chew meat properly.

Fried meats, particularly those which are pan fried or cooked in a small amount of fat, should not be given to young children. One reason for this is that they are likely to be overcooked and tough, at least on the outside, and so are likely not to be properly chewed and to be swallowed in large pieces. Another reason is that the fat used in frying and also that which tries out of the meat is likely to be scorched and changed in composition. When this is the case, it is almost certain to be harmful.

Some recipes for cooking meat for children follow:

Many cuts of meat too tough to be broiled whole may be prepared very satisfactorily by being chopped, salted and broiled. Allow about one-half teaspoonful of salt to a pound of meat. For very little children the meat should be scraped instead of being chopped, for in this way the connective tissue is taken out. An egg or a little milk may also be added. The most important point is careful handling, for if the meat is pressed together it becomes tough and hard. If a wire broiler is used, the cakes should not be squeezed between the two sides. To avoid this, lay them on top of the broiler and turn them with a knife and fork.

Stews made out of meat and vegetables offer a very great variety of dishes good in themselves and good also because they encourage the eating of bread. The meat used should, of course, be in good condition but need not be from a tender cut. The lower-priced cuts may be used with good results, provided they are made tender by long, slow cooking. Any vegetable may be added, including the tougher parts of lettuce, and the leaves of celery. Rice, barley, macaroni, or even crusts of stale bread may be used in the stew to give variety. A stew containing a little meat, with one or more vegetables, and a cereal comes near to supplying all the needed foods, other than milk.

Cut the meat into small pieces, cover with boiling water, boil for five minutes, and then cook at a lower temperature until the meat is tender. This will require about three hours on the stove or five hours in the fireless cooker. Add carrots, turnips, onions, pepper and salt during the last hour of cooking, and the potatoes 20 minutes before serving. Thicken with the flour diluted with cold water. If the dish is made in the fireless cooker, the mixture must be reheated when the vegetables are put in.

There is much to be said in favor of keeping a soup pot on the stove all the time, provided great care is taken not to allow the contents to grow stale. Into this pot can go clean portions of uncooked food and also clean foods left from the table, such as meat, milk, mashed potatoes or other vegetables, crusts, cold cereal mushes, and even fruits. Soups made from such materials may not have great nutritive value, but, like those made out of materials bought for the purpose, they encourage the use of a large amount of bread, particularly if carefully seasoned.

Chicken or turkey can be used for variety in children's diets. It is palatable stewed and served with rice. If roast chicken is used, select portions which are tender. It is well not to give a young child either highly seasoned stuffing (dressing) or rich gravy.

The use of cured fish, fresh fish and oysters in stews has been spoken of above. Boiled or stewed fish is also good for variety.

Eggs are especially useful food for young children. The chief point to remember in preparing them for children is that they must not be overcooked or they are likely to cause indigestion, as experience has shown. Everyone knows how the heat of cooking hardens the egg, and it is easy to understand why the digestive juices might have difficulty in penetrating such hard substance as the white of a hard-boiled egg. Overcooked yolks also thought to be hard to digest. However, when eggs are cooked in the shell, the heat reaches the white before it does the yolk, and so there is more danger of the white being overcooked than of the yolk. The best ways of serving eggs for children are poached, soft-boiled, or coddled, though they may be scrambled for a change if one is careful not to scorch the fat used or to overcook the egg.

One of the most satisfactory ways of cooking eggs is by coddling and is done as follows: Allow a cupful of water to each egg, bring the water to the boiling point, remove it from the fire, put in the eggs, cover the dish closely, and leave the eggs in the water for about seven minutes.

Milk and eggs, as stated above, are common meat substitutes. Among vegetable foods, dried beans, peas, lentils, and cowpeas, which are often classed together and called legumes, are the best substitutes for meat in the diet of older people, chiefly because they have large amounts of nitrogen needed for muscle building. In this respect they have some advantage, though not a great one, over cereals. Beans and the other legumes are not to be recommended for young children except when milk, meat, eggs, fish, and poultry are not to be obtained. When used they should be cooked until they are reduced to a mush. Since the skins are likely to be tough, it is well to put the cooked legumes through a sieve.

PERFECTION IN THE KITCHEN

One Secret of Successful Cooking Is Having Proper Materials With Which to Work.

Most housekeepers have wondered at times why there is "a touch" about the best hotel cooking that amateurs can seldom get. It is not because the materials are superior or the recipes exclusive; home cooking can be better than hotel cooking so far as that is concerned. It is partly due to the very simple factor of heat and cold. In the hotel kitchen everything is hot that should be hot, and everything that should be cold is just off the ice. The home kitchen may not be provided with huge refrigerators, warming tanks, and plate racks heated by steam, but that is no reason for not being up to date. Enamel double boilers, an enameled bain-marie, even an enameled saucepan or frying-pan or baking dish set in the top of a kettle of boiling water, will keep any sort of dish hot without its being dried or scorched. And they are far easier to keep clean than the elaborate copper and nickel fittings of the hotel.

The other thing in which the chef is apt to be superior is in the use of complex flavors in soups and sauces, and here again his creations can be rivaled with enameled scup-kettles and double boilers. The one thing that even some good cooks need to learn is that the longer and slower the process of blending flavors the more perfect is the blend.

"HODGE-PODGE" ECONOMICAL

Can Be Fashioned From Any Scraps the Larder Affords and Makes a Most Satisfactory Meal.

Having to live as cheaply as possible on account of the war, we have invented a "hodge-podge." It is made of any scraps the larder affords. Vegetable hodge-podge is one of the best, and gives the idea for all. Take a baking dish, put in a layer of finely-cut-up bread (crusts of cold toast is all right), next a layer of cold boiled macaroni with tomato sauce (rice will do as well) then cold boiled cabbage, cauliflower or parsnips, or, in fact any cold vegetable, and a layer of cold potatoes; salt and pepper. Add a few spoonfuls of gravy, if on hand. Repeat layer until dish is full; grate dry cheese generously on top. If not quite moist, add a little water. Put brown bread crumbs on top and heat thoroughly in the oven. It is surprisingly good, and makes a most satisfactory meal.—Woman's Home Companion.

Boiled Pork and Chili Sauce.

Prepare the chili sauce before cooking the meat and in a goodly quantity, as it will keep for a considerable time; or use chili sauce already prepared and bottled. The cutlets, taken from the leg of fresh pork, should be about half an inch in thickness. Place them between the bars of a double gridiron over a moderate fire, cook for about 20 minutes; when done place them on a hot dish, sprinkle over a little salt and pepper, put a little butter over them and serve with the chili sauce in a boat.

Buckwheat Cakes.

To one and a half pints of pure buckwheat flour add half cupful of white flour and cornmeal, three heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of brown sugar or molasses. Sift all the dry ingredients together and add a pint of milk or water, or sufficient to form a smooth batter that will pour easily (not too thin) from a pitcher.

Oysters in Sauerkraut.

Place in a baking dish alternately layers of cooked sauerkraut and oysters, starting and finishing with the sauerkraut. On top place a few strips of fat bacon. Place in a hot oven for about half an hour, or until heated through, and serve at once.

Changing Pillow Cases.

In putting on fresh pillow cases, start the pillow into the case, then, holding it to you press against the wall, and the pillow will slip in easily, filling the corners.

Appareled for the Boudoir

Feminine daintiness and love for beautiful color may be indulged without restraint within the walls of the boudoir. There is no excuse for any sort of ugliness there. Lingerie grows more and more airy and dainty, and in negligees the prettiest fancies of designs are interpreted in any extreme of style. Satin and chiffon, thin crepe and fine laces, are the alluring mediums with which the artist works out her dreams. Ribbons and little made flowers add touches that betray her delight in the work she undertakes.

Color is such an important factor in apparel for the boudoir that the less expensive sheer fabrics, in the same colors as silk stuffs, are used with as good results. Voiles, mull, lawn and thin mercerized cottons are made up with laces and trimmed with ribbons to make negligees that are as captivatingly colorful and dainty as any others. But they cost a fraction of the price of sheer silk materials.

The pantalettes are substituted for petticoats and worn under dance frocks or under negligees. They are of satin, joined to an under bodice of satin and lace. Wide val lace is cascaded down the sides in ruffles that widen toward the bottom. Just above the ankle the fullness is gathered on an elastic cord, forming a narrow frill. This combination is supported by ribbons tied at the shoulders.

Chiffon and Uruguay lace make the lovely empire coat worn over this combination. It is banded with ribbon in three widths, the widest forming a border about the bottom. Wide lace flouncing is draped in the effect of a mantle, falling over the sleeves and covering the upper half of the coat. It fastens at the waist line under two little bouquets of chiffon flowers made of tiny roses and ribbon foliage.

Recently Launched Summer Styles

It makes one long for midsummer, for the glory of June weddings, or even for graduation days, to view the new thin white dresses which have recently been launched upon the sea of summer fashions. They are a troth of frills and flounces and look as cool and unsubstantial as white clouds in the spring sky. These models of the utterly feminine in summer clothes are repeated in pale tints that are mere reflections of pink or green or blue. Occasionally illusive figures appear on them, usually in the form of lace applique in motifs that are applied to an under petticoat or to the underside of the skirt.

Organdie and other sheer crisp materials are better adapted to dresses of this kind than softer fabrics. Lawns and voiles are used for them, and it almost goes without saying that the flounces and frills are made very full always but fullest in the softer goods.

A frock of white organdie is shown in the illustration given here. It reveals the cleverest sort of management of style and material, each helping out the other. The skirt and bodice are in one, set together with a plain belt of white moire. There is a panel down the front made of a series of frills graduated in width. They are plaited in the narrowest of plaits and extend from the square neck to the bottom of the skirt. Two wide and very full flounces cover the remainder of the skirt. The hem of these flounces is trimmed into scallops and hemstitched at the edges.

The elbow sleeves are covered with four plaited frills and widen at the elbow. There is a quaint little cape about the shoulders, edged with a frill, and it falls over the shoulders to the topmost frill on the sleeves. The bodice is plain and is hemmed at the sides in a scalloped hem that falls over the panel at the front. It fastens at the side with invisible fastening of small flat buttons and loops.

Bowser's Chin Whiskers

The Reason He Did Not Grow Any.

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1916, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Bowser was going home in the street car one evening when he noticed two women who sat opposite him were looking him over very closely and evidently talking about him. He bent his ear to gather their words and heard one of them say:

"That is Mr. Bowser of Third place. You have read about him in the papers. He is a great man."

"I don't see it. He may have done great things, but he don't look it. If you hadn't told me who he was I should say that he was an insignificant man."

"Well, come to look at him, I'll agree that there is something lacking, without character or dignity. If he was my husband I should give him a bit of advice that would aid greatly to dignify him. I should advise him to grow chin whiskers."

"But why?" queried the other. "Because, don't you see, his face is too round, and because you never yet saw a man with chin whiskers but that they seemed to add to his dignity and greatness. His face wants to be lengthened out, as it were, and nothing but chin whiskers will do it. It is singular that his wife does not see it."

During the ride of a mile or more they continued to comment and criticize, and when Mr. Bowser reached home the first thing he did was to rush upstairs and survey his face in the glass. He looked at it from all angles and straight in the eyes and exclaimed to himself:

"By George, but those women were right! I have got the face of a baby—almost of a cabbage head. It is as round as the letter O, and while I have thought I always had a look of dignity and importance I see now that I have been wrong. Mrs. Bowser must be blind as well as I am. My face wants lengthening out, and I'll be hanged if I don't do it by growing chin whiskers."

Mr. Bowser thought over the idea for the next three days, and at midnight one night he awoke and resolved to take his plunge. It was a radical step. He had never worn any whiskers at all, and what would the world say when he wagged a long whisker below his chin? Would men taunt him with trying to look ten years younger than he was, and would the police suspect that he was guilty of some criminal act and trying to hide his identity? And Mrs. Bowser? Would she be pleased or gibe at him? And his mother-in-law? Would she say that she could dearly love a son-in-law with luxuriant side whiskers, but she had no use for one whose chin whiskers made him look like a goat's grandfather?

But Mr. Bowser had decided, and there was a look of the greatest determination around his mouth when he arose in the morning. It was his day for shaving, but he did not shave. He had neglected his razor for the past three days, but he would wait now until evening and then go to a barber. If he was to grow chin whiskers they must be blocked out gracefully and scientifically.

At the breakfast table Mrs. Bowser noticed the stubble on his face, but made no comment. He had probably taken a new fancy into his head, and she would wait for it to develop before criticizing. Several times he found himself about to ask her if she had ever noticed how chin whiskers took away at least ten years from a man's face, but he restrained himself. It would be time to ask when those whiskers were blocked out and growing like young corn after a heavy thunder shower. Mr. Bowser passed a long day, and the office boy couldn't help but wonder why he rubbed his chin so often. He had long had the habit of pulling down his vest at brief intervals, but never of rubbing his chin. He confided to the office boy in the next building his suspicions that his boss was about to raise chin whiskers, and he declared that if such a heinous crime was committed he would strike for higher wages and leave his place if he did not get them.

Mr. Bowser made a rush again for the glass when he reached home that evening. His face was still fat and round. His chin was still there. A stubble of a beard was there to be blocked out. Within an hour he would make a start to become a different man. He rather hurried up his dinner to get away to the barber's. It was as he arose from the table that he said to Mrs. Bowser:

"My dear, have you noticed that I have not shaved for the last three or four days?"

"I have," was the reply. "What is the matter?"

"It is rheumatism in the right arm, and I dare not use my razor. I will run out to the barber's and get this stubble mowed off."

"You will look better for it," she said as he passed down the hall to don coat and hat.

Mr. Bowser might have been seen passing along the street, while the bright moon of a winter's evening cast its shadow ahead of him. There was no shadow of chin whiskers, but there soon would be.

Mr. Bowser might have been seen arriving at the barber shop. He had come on an errand that might create or wreck an empire, but he was determined to see it through.

The barber welcomed him and escorted him to the chair, and while he mixed and applied the lather he felt it his duty to entertain a guest. He began by asking:

"Did you hear about the man who committed suicide about two hours ago?"

"No," was the answer. "Was it around here somewhere?"

"Only three blocks away. He jumped from a wharf right into the canal and went down to the bottom like a stone. Some boys saw him jump in. What do you suppose was his last act before he jumped?"

"He pulled off his coat maybe," said Mr. Bowser.

"No, he didn't. He tugged at his chin whiskers as if he would pull them out by the roots."

"That was funny."

"And yet it wasn't," went on the barber as he rubbed away at the cheek. "Four-fifths of the suicides among men are wearers of chin whiskers. It seems to affect their brains—the raising of whiskers on the chin."

"I don't see how that can be," blurted exclaimed Mr. Bowser. "Whiskers have nothing to do with the brain, whether on chin or cheeks."

"I beg to differ with you," said the barber in propitiating tones. "I have been in this business for twenty years, and I have made a study of whiskers all that time. Let me give you a tip. If you want to come to grief raise and wear chin whiskers. No man of sound judgment ever wears them. They denote a weak character. They denote a vacillating mind. They are a sign of vanity."

"I can't agree with you," protested Mr. Bowser. "Take my own case here. Would you say that I am a weak minded or vain man?"

"Quite the contrary, sir."

"Then what difference would it make if I wore chin whiskers?"

"It would change your looks entirely, sir. You will excuse me, I am sure, but if you brought chin whiskers into this shop I should have a poor opinion of your character. You would be like a man I have heard of. His name is Bowser, and he lives about a mile from here."

"Bowser, eh? What about Bowser?" asked the man in the chair as he sat up a little.

"Why, he is the vainest and most conceited man in all the town. He quarrels with his wife and is always in the wrong. He is always kicking to his butcher and grocer. He is always wanting to raise chickens, go to the north pole or some such fool thing. Say, I didn't get the name of the man who jumped into the canal, but a thought strikes me. I'll bet a dollar even up that it was old Bowser himself. It would be just like him to start in and grow chin whiskers and when he found what the world thought of him become despondent and rush for the canal. As soon as you go out I shall try to find out whether it is him or not. I believe he has been in this shop two or three times and that I could identify him, even if dead. There is little room, sir, for cranks and kickers in this world of ours, and maybe it was time for old Bowser to go up there where they play on the golden harps."

"You seem to have a personal grudge in this case," said Mr. Bowser, as he made a motion as if to get out of the chair.

"Oh, no, no, no," said the barber, flourishing his razor around. "In fact, instead of a grudge I have pity for him, whether he is alive or dead. I have read and heard enough about him to realize that he was born half witted and can't help being what he is. It's pretty hard on his wife, though, and the last straw to break the camel's back would be for him to grow chin whiskers. Will you start in to raise a mustache, sir, or shall I give you a clean shave?"

"Do you take me for a jackass?" fairly shouted Mr. Bowser.

"Certainly not, sir. I shall go ahead and shave everything. You are right, sir. A man with your face would be a jackass to fall in love with either a mustache or whiskers. About that Mr. Bowser, sir—"

"Oh, shut up about Bowser!" exclaimed the man in the chair.

And the barber didn't block out any beautiful chin whiskers, and Mr. Bowser didn't go home and surprise Mrs. Bowser. All she said when he came in and sat down was:

"You look better with that stubble off. If you had any sort of whiskers they would make your face look like a pumpkin half hidden away in the pig-weeds."

Rex Beach by Walt Mason

Among the world's great story tellers, those gifted, entertaining fellers, Rex Beach is stacking high; and I am always in my glory when I have got a new Beach story; it suits me more than pie. Red blood in all his yarns is seething; his characters are living, breathing, not dummies made of wood; strong men admire his kind of writing, of heroism, peril, fighting—it's always to the good. And Rex, when he is busy working, his trusty old typewriter jerking, until it busts a spoke, to have his inspiration quickened keeps all the air around him thickened with rich Tuxedo smoke. Say, have you noticed, gentle readers, how many famous men and leaders explain Tuxedo's worth? As man's great solace they expound it, and that's because they all have found it the best there is on earth.

REX BEACH
Famous Author, says:
"I have smoked Tuxedo for sub-Arctic Alaska, at Panama, and everywhere—would not smoke another kind."

Wooing by Mail May Be Romantic but It's Also Risky

By LAURA JEAN LIBBEY

(Copyright, 1916.)

Oh, golden opportunity that means so much,
They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in,
For every morn I stand outside your door
And bid you wake to rise, to fight and win.

There can be little or no successful wooing by mail, you say, and I answer: "Oh, yes, but there is and it is the most romantic kind of romance. Introductions are made by mutual friends by letter and the pendulum is set swinging."

A score or more of friendly letters may pass between a man and woman ere interest is awakened by the few casual words which touch the heart's hidden spring. It is usually the missing of a letter on the day he is wont to receive it that arouses a man to the realization that there would be something missing from his happiness if those letters were stopped altogether.

If he had never beheld the writer, his fancy paints glowing pictures of the fair face bent over the page. He is sure she must be good to look upon. Almost without realizing it at first the tone of his letters grows more fervent. She replies to them so modestly, yet with such diffidence, he becomes more charmed with her than ever. At length, with manly directness and earnestness, he asks her if she is averse to being wooed and won.

He puts in a good many sleepless nights between hope and fear, wondering if her reply will be favorable. It is. Their betrothal by mail follows as a matter of course.

It is a trying ordeal for a man to have his photo taken, but he goes through the experience because she has asked for it, eagerly begging for hers in return. For one reason or another, she delays sending it. They set the wedding day. Thereupon follows the first hitch in his wooing. His business is of such a nature he cannot go to her and after much urging it is decided that she shall come to him. His womenfolk will be with him to meet her at the train. The minister who is to join them in wedlock will be waiting their arrival at the church, where his neighbors, friends and townspeople will be gathered to give her a royal welcome.

She describes the costume she will wear. He designates the place he will be standing. He hears the train approach with a heart in his bosom beating like a timid schoolboy's. In fancy, he anticipates a shy, frightened young girl alighting and looking about her with wide, bewildered eyes, in the brown dress and white sailor hat with the wreath of daisies about it which she has so minutely described. He knows he will be able to determine at a glance whether she is sweet sixteen or demure twenty. He almost wishes he were not yet the five and thirty he has candidly owned up to.

The train stops. One figure only alights. He sees the fluttering of a brown dress, whose wearer waves an umbrella vigorously in his direction. In the woman who has come on at his solicitation to marry him he sees a person of fully 200 pounds weight, red as to face and white as to hair, a spectacled grandma looking every one of her fifty years. He begs off at a heavy price.

Moral—It is dangerous to woo and win a stranger by mail!

A Few Table Don'ts.

Here are a few valuable "don'ts" for the table:

When your hostess hands you a plate, don't offer to pass it on to another person. Take what your hostess intended for you.

And when you have your food, don't hesitate about beginning to eat. Old-fashioned people wait until all are served before eating, but it isn't strictly correct to do this. Of course, if you happen to be one of a home party, where you are passing vegetables to others, you would naturally see that you had done your part before beginning to enjoy your share of the meal.

Don't take a second helping of soup or fish if you are going through a meal of several courses.

Never cut your bread. It should be broken on the cloth, or the plate that may be provided, and broken without raising it from the table.

Don't shake salt over your food. Salt and mustard should be placed on the side of the plate.

For the sake of your neighbors don't stick out your elbows when dining. People who have acquired this very bad habit should practice until they find another angle. When manipulating food on the plate use the hands from the wrist, not from the elbows.

A COMEDY —IN— ONE REEL

The Red Mirage

A Story of the French Legion in Algiers

By J. A. R. WYLIE

(All rights reserved. The Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

SYNOPSIS.

When Sylvia Orme, a beautiful English girl, returns from a search in Algiers for her missing brother, Richard Farquhar, finds she has fallen in love with Captain Arnaud of the Foreign Legion. In Captain Sower's room Farquhar gets deliberately drunk, but when young Preston loses all his money to Lowe, a shady character, Farquhar forces Sower to have Preston's I. O. U's returned to him. Farquhar is helped to his room by Gabrielle Smith. Sower demands an apology. Refused, he forces Farquhar to resign his commission in return for possession of Farquhar's father's written confession that he had murdered Sower's father. Gabrielle saves Farquhar from suicide. Farquhar tells his mother that he is going to find his father if the latter is alive. To shield Arnaud, Sylvia's fiancé, he professes to have stolen war plans and tells the real culprit why he did so. As Richard Nameless joins the Foreign Legion and sees Sylvia, now Mme. Arnaud, meet Colonel Destinn, Farquhar meets Sylvia and Gabrielle, and looks on Corporal Goetz of the colonel's cruelty. Arnaud becomes a drunkard and opium smoker. Sylvia becomes friendly with Colonel Destinn. Arnaud becomes jealous of Farquhar.

Why should Richard Nameless refrain from telling Sylvia the blunt truth about his great honor sacrifice for her sake? She is a shallow woman who ruthlessly threw him over for another. Do such women deserve the fine consideration the world owes its best women?

Richard Nameless turned back to the desert. The Arabs had risen and an elder was praying aloud, his aged, tremulous voice leading the richer unison of the worshippers behind him.

"With my face to Mecca and with a sincere heart I offer my prayers to Allah."

Mirage! For those dark-faced desert children Mecca opened the gates of Paradise; for this dream of unknown happiness they waited and prayed, and when their time came passed through the great shadow with fearless, triumphant confidence.

He went back to his work. With fierce, dogged energy he pulled away the deep-rooted weeds and brought a pathetic look of care and order into his corner of the wilderness. For a moment he lingered over the grave which Goetz had tended. The bald yet eloquent inscription touched him. He wondered vaguely who Philip Grey had been; if he, too, had paid a price and in the last hours of horror had still been satisfied.

Two women had entered the cemetery. Their white-clad figures flashed gayly in between the dark graves, and a clear, silvery laugh mingled with the final Arab prayer:

"La ilaha illa 'llahu!"

The younger woman stopped an instant and pointed with the tip of her parasol at the broken remnant of a cross.

"Look at these beads! Aren't they ridiculous? And the inscription—just a number, like a convict's." She glanced back over her shoulder at her companion. "Miss Smith, I believe you are frightened. Do you think there are ghosts here? Well, perhaps there are, but I don't mind."

As yet the man standing immobile, hidden amid the forest of crosses, had escaped her notice. But he had heard her now, and, shadowy and ghostlike enough in the dying light, awaited her approach. At the foot of the Englishman's grave she hesitated. The inscription attracted her. With puckered brows she spelled out the badly cut letters, her soft voice touched with just the faintest ironical interest.

"Philip Grey—No. 3112—Foreign Legion."

Then she looked up involuntarily and saw the man who watched her, his hand gripping the head of the cross.

It was very quiet now. The Arab prayer was silenced, and the white figures of the worshippers had vanished in the long olive grove leading back to Sidi-bel-Abbes. Sylvia Arnaud's voice, when she spoke at last, sounded strained and harsh in the absolute quiet.

"Richard!" and then again, "Richard Farquhar!"

He shook his head. "Not Richard Farquhar now," he answered. "Richard Nameless."

She seemed not to understand. Her lips were a little parted in the expression that he remembered. She looked piteously frightened and incredulous.

"I am sorry to have frightened you," he said gently. "I did not mean that you should ever see me—but you came so suddenly, and out in this desolate place you were the last person I expected. Forgive me."

"Yes—yes, it is a desolate place—it makes me frightened. But I was told it was something I ought to see—and a few minutes ago I wasn't frightened at all. Now—I see ghosts everywhere."

"I am one of them," he said.

She brushed her hand over her forehead as though indeed trying to dispel some terrifying specter. Her feeble effort to regain her previous laughing courage failed. She was white and trembling.

"I am No. 4005 of the Foreign Legion," he said. "Is there anything else that you need understand?"

"Yes—I must. I feel as though one of us two were mad. The Foreign Legion is just the last resort for all the riffraff of the world—criminals, gamblers, cheats—"

"I am one of them."

She was silent a moment, looking at him with large, thoughtful eyes, out of which the fear had passed. When she spoke again her voice was full of a smothered tenderness.

"I have thought of you so much lately, Richard. I couldn't understand why it was. You haunted me. It was as though something in the place made me think of you. I remembered all your little movements, the way you looked. I seemed to see you in others. I grew almost—how shall I say?—homesick for you."

"You should have forgotten," he interrupted roughly. "I have gone out of your life. Look upon me now as what I am now—a mere shadow."

"Richard, what have you done?" The tenderness had deepened. He clenched his hands in a movement of uncontrollable pain.

"Hasn't your husband told you?"

"No. We never mention your name. To me it is sacred."

"For God's sake, Sylvia—" He straightened up, his black brows marking a straight line across his face. "I was turned out of the army for betraying my country's secrets."

"You—a traitor! Why?" The monosyllable was like the stab of a knife in the silence.

"For a woman."

She drew back. Her eyes were dark pools in which he saw no expression.

"What woman?"

He bowed gravely.

"Madame Arnaud, I have still honor enough left to remember the discretion imposed upon honorable men."

She turned away from him. He could see nothing but her profile, the exquisite, almost flawless profile, cut against a background of mingling gold and emerald. Her hands rested crossed on the handle of her parasol. She had grown suddenly very calm and deliberate.

"You a Traitor! Why?"

"I told you that I had thought of you, Richard," she said quietly. "I did not tell you how I thought of you. Do you remember our last meeting, or has that been eclipsed by other more lovely memories?"

"Silvia, be silent! I dare not listen to you. You don't know what you are saying—"

"I know what I am saying, and you must listen. When a man destroys something, it is no more than just that he should see what he has done. You have destroyed something—an ideal, a dream, my faith in honesty and goodness. You were the one man I believed and trusted. And now you are like the rest—nothing—nothing." She turned away. "I wish to God I had not met you, Richard."

He did not attempt to detain her. He stood there like a man struck to death by a treacherous blow, and she went on down the path to the gate where her companion waited for her. There she paused for a moment.

"I want you to go back to that man," she said carelessly. "He is an old acquaintance who went wrong, and it might be rather unpleasant for my husband if he grew importunate. Tell him that on no account must he speak to me again. It is very regrettable, but mistakes of that sort bring their own punishment. You understand, Miss Smith?"

"Yes, Madame Arnaud."

"Thank you. I will wait for you outside the public cemetery. It is getting dark—"

Miss Smith went slowly back along the narrow gravel path. The man had not moved. He was gazing out on to the fiery waste now dying beneath the extinguishing mantle of the night, and neither heard nor saw. She touched him on the arm.

"Mr. Farquhar!" He turned slowly and stared at her. Though he recognized her, his face was blank and hard and terrible.

"Miss Smith?"

"Yes, Gabrielle Smith. You see, after all, we have met again. Won't you shake hands?"

His eyes wandered past her down the path.

"No. You ought not to be speaking to me. A respectable woman does not speak to a common soldier of the Legion."

"Doesn't she? How interesting! One is always learning in this wonderful civilization of ours. Only as it happens I am not respectable. I told you that once before."

Her cool irony brought a flash of insane laughter to his eyes.

"Who the devil are you, then?" he asked savagely.

"Dear me, you have quite lost your nice English indifference, Mr. Farquhar. I'm not sure it isn't an improvement. Who I am? Well, you know my name, and at the present moment I am companion to Madame Arnaud—helping her to forget that she isn't English any more. English people think it's wrong to admire foreigners. It's their idea of patriotism. Madame Arnaud assures me she must have a bit of dear old England about her, and I am the bit. That's all."

"Why did you come?"

He was looking at her again. Through the dusk she saw the white, tortured suspense on the hard face. She wore a rose in the severe corsage of her dress. She took it and handed it to him.

"She sent you this—in token of remembrance."

He took her hand and kissed it.

"You have come like an angel into my life," he said.

He watched her until her small, energetic figure had disappeared among the shadows.

In the distance a bugle called a melancholy retreat.

He lifted the rose reverently to his lips.

CHAPTER VII.

A Meeting.

In Sidi-bel-Abbes there is a pleasant avenue, shaded by silver birch and redolent of all the sweet perfumes of the East, where the local potentates gather in a select exclusive circle. In the courtyard of one such of these houses Colonel Destinn sat and smoked an after-tea cigarette. His kepi lay on the broad balustrade beside him, and his head was thrown back in an attitude of easy contentment.

"You pour out tea charmingly, madame," he said. "A second cup would stifle the last regret that I should have gone so far against my principles as to drink a first."

She looked up at him. The soft reflection from the low, white walls around them enhanced her ethereal beauty and added the subtle glamour with which the eastern light surrounds the least and most lovely object. Very delicately she obeyed his request, the soft, rich lace sleeve of her teagown slipping back to reveal the rounded arm and slender over-fragile wrist.

"Do your principles compel you to live only for your soldiers?" she asked lightly.

He laughed.

"Living for them' is perhaps too much of a euphemism," he said. "They would be more grateful if I did the other thing. But otherwise it is true. I have not put my foot under a hospitable roof for twenty years."

"Had you no one who—" She hesitated, a sudden color in her cheeks, and he leaned forward, his hands loosely interlocked between his knees, his handsome, ruthless face grave and intent.

"No, I hadn't anyone, Madame Arnaud."

Her gaze faltered under his steady, piercing eyes.

"What is your country, Colonel Destinn?"

"I do not know, madame. I have forgotten." There was a little silence, in which the fountain played a silvery intermezzo, and then he went on in an altered tone: "You are the first person who has made wish to remember."

She was looking up at him again with a studied frankness, behind which there lurked something hypnotized, fascinated.

He turned carelessly from her.

"Ah, Arnaud, you there? You see, I have been breaking up the principles of years to entertain your wife. If you leave her too much alone you will find these English roses fade very quickly in this dreary place. Man, don't look as if you had seen the devil."

The young officer, hesitating on the edge of the low veranda, recovered himself with an effort.

"My colonel—I was taken aback. I had not expected—but I am delighted and most honored. I beg of you to let me enjoy the pleasure—"

"No, no, Arnaud. We see enough of each other elsewhere, and, moreover, I have a pressing engagement with three deserters from the Eleventh company. Au revoir, madame—and thank you!"

How soon do you think that Sylvia's flirting with Colonel Destinn will cause Tragedy to stalk abroad in the Foreign Legion. It seems plain that Mme. Arnaud knows she is playing with fire.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

PIG WHO TOOK A WALK.

"There was once a little fairy, who was named Fairy Sunrise, because every morning she got up just at the same time as Mr. Sun did."

"She had a great love for nice little pigs, as she thought they were very cunning, and not at all the horrid little creatures some people think they are."

"But one little pig worried her a great deal. He put on airs and was very proud of himself. The little pig's name was 'Gink,' and he was the pet pig of a little girl who lived on a farm. Of course, although there were plenty of other pigs on the farm, this little girl was fonder of Gink than of any other. She thought his squeal was much the nicest little squeal she had ever heard."

"Gink was very much petted, and he had a most beautiful home. There was delicious mud for him to play in. He could make mud pies all day long if he wanted to, and if he felt lazy he could simply lie in the cool mud all the time."

"But this special time I am going to tell you about, Gink had a very great wish to exercise. It was simply because he was becoming so vain."

"He had overheard some city folks who had visited the farm talk about their figures. For a long time he couldn't imagine what they meant. Then, after listening for some time, he heard one of them say that it was quite all right to eat everything anyone wanted to, but everyone must exercise, walk and play games so as not to grow fat—for it was so ugly to be fat!"

"Gink had never thought it was ugly to be fat, but then that was because he had never really thought about it at all. And yet when he did think about it, he decided that he would much rather keep just 'plump' as he now was than grow as fat as his mother was. For he said that his mother was a little bit old fashioned, and he wanted to be a very modern pig."

"The next day he went for a walk. He went through the little village, just managing to escape from under horses' feet, and the little boys' bicycles. He went as far as the lake, where he saw some boys starting off on a camping trip."

"Don't you want to come with us?" asked one of the boys.

"The little pig was just about to start off, thinking in his vain way that the trip would do him good, when he heard a second boy say:

"Won't he make wonderful bacon?"

"Then you should have seen little Gink run home to his mistress. And after that awful fright and narrow escape, Gink stayed on the farm outside of the village, and decided fashions were very silly, and apt to be dangerous. He also lost his love of walking!

"And little Fairy Sunrise who had been around just in time to whisper to the little boy (though of course he didn't see her) the word 'bacon' which had frightened Gink so much, was delighted that all her schemes had worked out so well, and that she had cured the vain Gink."

"GIRL MYSTERY" IS AMUSING

Girls Disguise Faces in Pretty Colored Masks and Boys Guess Identities of Lassies.

In the game of "Girl Mystery," all the girls wear the pretty colored masks obtainable nowadays for a few cents—disguising their faces and hair and allowing only their eyes to be exposed to view. The girls then stand on chairs behind a curtain or screen, allowing their heads only to appear above, and the boys equipped with pencils and paper proceed to guess the identities of the dainty lassies and to write their names down in order. The player who makes the most correct guesses obtains the prize.

In Shakespeare, 30 Letters.

It is rather remarkable, as Miss Ellen Terry pointed out in her address at His Majesty's theater recently, that, despite the multitude of books which have been published about Shakespeare's plays, little attention has been given to the letters therein, the London Chronicle observes.

They number thirty in all, but easily escape attention. In fact, when Miss Terry asked three friends what they knew of the subject, two of them could not recall any letters at all, while the knowledge of the third does not extend beyond the letters occurring in the "Merry Wives of Windsor" and "The Merchant of Venice." These are letters made familiar through the medium of the theaters.

No single one of Shakespeare's letters, written as a man and not as a playwright, has survived, but those in the plays were, like the plays, perfect. They always fell naturally into the story. In the ordinary play letters are usually employed to give a clumsy explanation from the dramatist because he has not the skill to do it in any other way.

CALOMEL SELDOM SOLD HERE NOW

Nasty drug salivates, makes you sick and you lose a day's work.

Every druggist in town—your druggist and everybody's druggist has noticed a great falling-off in the sale of calomel. They all give the same reason. Dodson's Liver Tone is taking its place. "Calomel is dangerous and people know it, while Dodson's Liver Tone is perfectly safe and gives better results," said a prominent local druggist. Dodson's Liver Tone is personally guaranteed by every druggist who sells it. A large bottle costs 50 cents, and if it fails to give easy relief in every case of liver sluggishness and constipation, you have only to ask for your money back.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable remedy, harmless to both children and adults. Take a spoonful at night and wake up feeling fine; no biliousness, sick headache, acid stomach or constipated bowels. It doesn't gripe or cause inconvenience all the next day like violent calomel. Take a dose of calomel today and tomorrow you will feel weak, sick and nauseated. Don't lose a day's work! Take Dodson's Liver Tone instead and feel fine, full of vigor and ambition.—Adv.

HAS EARNED ITS POPULARITY

Turkey Welcomed in Every Country Where the People Appreciate Good Things to Eat.

In every corner of the globe almost, at least where civilization has spread its epicurean tastes, may be found the domesticated turkey—not, however, of his own volition. Never would he, in his wild state, have sought to cross the stormy seas to find green fields and pastures new.

He is not so constructed. He is not bold or adventurous of disposition. On the contrary, he is timid and much afraid of things he does not understand, and when undisturbed is prone to let well enough alone and get along with his accustomed feeding grounds.

Again, as a flier the turkey is not a pronounced success. He flies ponderously, almost painfully, and with great effort and only when much frightened. His flight can be sustained for only a short distance, but what the wild turkey lacks as an aviator he fully makes up as a sprinter.

He can outrun a race horse, especially in his own native forest, where undergrowth and bushes seem but to add to his speed. But he could not have flown over the ocean even if he had had that unnatural desire.

He was taken over by the hand of man; first to Spain, then to other Mediterranean countries, to northern Europe, to the far East, until now he is well-nigh omnipresent. And this spreading out of his kind even unto the ends of the earth is all due to the entrancing qualities his meat takes on when properly baked or roasted.

Manhattan Is Flat-Footed.

Little old Manhattan is flat-footed, wears poor shoes and stands up at its work, according to figures compiled by Capt. Frank E. Evans of the recruiting office of the United States Marine corps. Captain Evans is authority for the statement that approximately 18 per cent of all applicants who applied for enlistment in the marine corps at its Twenty-third street office during the past year, were rejected for "pes planus," or flat-foot. He puts the blame on the cheaply constructed, poorly made shoes the average toiler wears at his work for the epidemic of falling arch, and on the fact that the majority of victims claimed they were forced to stand on their feet for long stretches while at their employment.

Motormen, conductors, subway guards, policemen, machinists, waiters and clerks are the principal sufferers from "pes planus," Captain Evans says.—New York Times.

Care of Goldfish.

A globe of two or three goldfish with a bit of green seaweed makes a pretty centerpiece, and they are inexpensive and easily cared for. They should be placed at some distance from stove and register and not in the rays of the sun. They endure extremes of cold rather than heat. In the bottom of the globe place some small stones, a bit of sand, a little charcoal and a spray of cabomba, a fine water plant. Feed them a little at a time. Once in two weeks remove them to a pail of muddy water for an hour, clean the globe, replace the shells, stones, etc., and refill with clear, cold water.

Army of Monaco Dissolved.

The army of Monaco, though small, was resplendent during peace times, but now that war is under way it has been dissolved because the professional soldiers who composed it have all been called home and are fighting under the French or Italian colors, as the case may be, or drawn up in the Swiss contingents guarding the frontier.

Ideals Make Possible Big Accomplishments of Life

By NELLIE R. UMSTOTT

Along life's way we often meet those who betray the fact that they doubt the practicability and value of ideals, but if, as such men believe, ideals are nothing but dreams, rosy and beautiful, yet perishable, why do men achieve great things in the face of every obstacle placed in their pathway? Is it not because they had an ideal and clung to it until it was realized?

Ideals, to be worth anything, must be made practical, and making them practical is the test of manhood.

Had our beloved poet, Longfellow, said, "Ideals are mere dreams; we are but common clay, filled with besetting sins, born to meet temptation on every hand and fall," would he have had the courage to write his immortal poems by which so many men have been inspired and strengthened? He is only one of many.

If we have an ideal, be it of manhood or womanhood, let us cling to it with might and main and make it a part of our lives. Then, perchance, some day someone, if only one, may strive to reach our ideal because he loves us.

Just as "thoughts are things," ideals are realities and we are the weavers.

A FEW SMILES

Blissful Ignorance.

"Do you know how many miles an hour your car is capable of making?"

"No," answered the cautious motorist. "You see, I have never been in such a hurry to reach a certain destination that I was willing to risk breaking my neck trying to get there."

Like Reading a Book.

"Women patronize moving pictures in large numbers."

"How do you account for that?"

"Maybe it's because the silent drama offers superior advantages over the spoken play, from the feminine point of view."

"In what particular?"

"By coming in at the proper moment a woman can learn how a photograph ends and she can then settle back comfortably to see all the episodes when the film is reversed."

Unappreciative Parent.

"Old Mr. Cobles has a son who has taken several degrees at college."

"I notice he loafs around home all the time and never does a stroke of work."

"Yes. Another degree was recently conferred on him by Mr. Cobles, the degree of 'N. W. K.'"

"What does that mean?"

"Not worth killing."

Accomplishment Worth While.

"Making much progress with your garden, Dubwaite?"

"You will be surprised to hear what I have accomplished."

"You work it every day, I presume?"

"No. I've succeeded in persuading my wife to work it."

A Rash Promise.

"Here's an attractive advertisement for summer boarders."

"What does it say?"

"'Act as if you owned the earth at our place and we'll act as if we were going to give it to you.'"

That Elusive Vote.

"No matter how insignificant a man may be, he always feels important on election day."

"Yes. That's due to the power of the ballot. Election day is the only day in the year when some men possess anything that anybody else would go out of his way to get."

Artificial Blood Latest.

Blood infusion will no longer require the sacrifice of blood from one person to save the life of another, if an invention of a New York physician meets the claims now being made for it. It is a formula for artificial blood which closely approximates the characteristics of real blood. It is composed chiefly of gelatin solution, sodium chloride and distilled water. The danger from hemorrhage is due not so much to the loss of the actual corpuscles in the blood as to the loss of volume. A number of experiments with this new formula indicate that it will serve as a substitute for human blood, at least in many cases.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

Washington Omelet.

Soak a cupful of breadcrumbs in a cupful of hot milk. Beat six egg yolks and add to the crumbs with salt and pepper. Fold in the beaten whites of the eggs and bake in a thickly buttered pan in a rather hot oven for 15 minutes. This is very good served with a garnish of green peas or tomato sauce.

Apple Salad.

Take equal parts of diced apple, celery and a few blanched walnuts, mix with enough mayonnaise to moisten well and add one tablespoonful of horseradish to each pint of salad. Diced pineapple may be used instead of the nuts, making a pleasant variety.

Spinach.

This is one of the valuable vegetables which supply us with iron. Wash it carefully and put it to cook with no water but that which clings to the leaves. Cover at first until its own juice flows, then open and boil till tender, watching it carefully and turning it to keep it from scorching. Chop very fine and serve with hard-boiled eggs as a garnish, or simply with vinegar and a seasoning of salt, pepper and butter.

Whole-Wheat Pudding.

Take two cupfuls of whole-wheat flour, a half teaspoonful of soda, a cupful of milk, a half teaspoonful of salt, a cupful of dates and a half cupful of molasses, beat well, and steam 2½ hours in a buttered mold. If thick sour milk is used, add a teaspoonful of soda. Serve with whipped cream, plain cream or any preferred liquid sauce.

Rhubarb and Raisin Pudding.

Here is one you can give the children: Take a pint of rhubarb cut in half-inch pieces, sprinkled with a cupful of sugar. Let stand an hour or more. Toss a pint of breadcrumbs into three tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Put in layers into a baking dish, sprinkling a cupful of raisins in between, having the crumbs on top. Cover closely the first half hour and bake one hour. Serve with a sauce or with beaten cream.

Bread spread with butter and the rhubarb and raisins put over it in layers is another splendid pudding, also baked.

Bananas baked with butter, sugar and lemon juice for a sauce are delicious served with beefsteak.

IF YOU SUFFER FROM BACKACHE, LUMBAGO, KIDNEYS OR RHEUMATISM, TAKE HOT WATER AND "ANURIC"

American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, when your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night, when you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your druggist—"ANURIC." Because of uric acid in over-abundance in the system, backache, pains here and there, rheumatism, gout, gravel, neuralgia and sciatica result. It was Dr. Pierce who discovered a new agent, called "Anuric" which will throw out and eradicate this uric acid from the system. Dr. Pierce believes "Anuric" to be 37 times more potent than lithia, and consequently you need no longer fear muscular or articular rheumatism or gout, or many other diseases which are dependent on an accumulation of uric acid within the body. Send Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c. for trial package or $1.00 for full treatment "Anuric."

Dr. Pierce's reputation is back of this medicine and you know that his "Pleasant Pellets" for the liver and his "Favorite Prescription" for the ills of women have had a splendid reputation for the past 50 years.

ESTIMATING AGE OF EARTH

Geologists Have Differed Greatly as to the Time It Has Been in Existence.

As long ago as 1860 John Phillips, the geologist, estimated that the time required for the deposition of the stratified rocks lay between 38,000,000 and 96,000,000 years. This was probably the only estimate prior to Kelvin's epoch-making paper of 1862. Since that time many estimates have been made, varying all the way from 17,000,000 years to 400,000,000 years. Kelvin was the first to discuss the age of the earth considered as a cooling body. In 1893 Clarence King introduced the important criterion of tidal stability and reached the conclusion that 24,000,000 represented the conditions. This result was adopted by Kelvin in 1897, and then he placed the limits as 20,000,000 and 40,000,000 years. Only Sir George Darwin has discussed the age of the earth from a purely astronomical point of view. From his theory of the earth-moon system he derived an estimate of more than 56,000,000 years, which for a long time stood between groups of higher and lower figures. J. Joly was the first to base estimates of the age of the earth, in 1899, on the sodium contained in the ocean. Adopting the hypothesis that the sodium content of the ocean is derived at a constant rate from that of the rocks, he arrived at an age of 80,000,000 or 90,000,000 years, and increased this by 10,000,000 in 1900. In 1909 Mr. Sottas made a searching inquiry into this subject and placed the age of the ocean at between 80,000,000 and 150,000,000 years.

Food Troubles in Paris.

After having tried, luckily without success, to interfere with the sale of bread and wine, our excellent deputies now ask us to adapt our stomachs to the use of dog grease instead of butter, remarks the Cri de Paris. Certain interests have appeared to propose, in effect, a law "to facilitate the sale of margarine and oleomargarine, products of which the qualities nearly approach those of butter," in the same localities where butter is made and sold. These deputies are full of good intentions, but their ignorance fully equals their good will. In principle, the name of margarine should be butter by color, consistence, odor and taste. But in practice it is quite different. The word "margarine" has become a term that is applied to all fats of vegetable or animal origin. When there is a superabundance in time of peace some fine soaps are made with margarine obtained from the cadavers of animals that have perished. But are we to be obliged to eat it in time of war?

OF HISTORIC INTEREST

TOWN OF GORIZIA RESTING PLACE OF ROYALTY.

Among Many Others, It Contains the Tombs of Charles X and "Henry V" of France—Known as "Austrian Nice."

Mentioned almost daily in the war dispatches from the Italo-Austrian front, the little town of Gorizia has gained considerable prominence of late.

Besides being the center of important military operations, Gorizia is of interest because of its historic associations. Lying between Venice and Trieste, not far from the Adriatic, Gorizia has a population of about 20,000.

The town has been an Austrian possession for more than five centuries, and its pleasant climate has earned it the name of "the Austrian Nice."

In the outskirts on a hill is a Franciscan monastery, the road to which is marked by the 14-station way of the cross. From the esplanade in front of the monastery church an extensive view of the surrounding country is obtained.

Below spreads the town, with the ancient chateau of the counts of Gorizia and the Villa Boeckmann, once the winter residence of the count de Chambord, towering over the less pretentious houses. A little further off one can trace the capricious course of the Isonzo river, the bed of which is said to be the burial place of Attila, the Hun chieftain.

In the distance lies the Carso limestone plateau, sheltering the magnificent castles of Duino, belonging to the house of Hohenlohe, and Miramar, which used to be the favorite residence of Archduke Maximilian, later emperor of Mexico.

The horizon is bounded by Trieste, a chain of snow-covered Alp peaks, the Venetian plain and the Adriatic. In the little chapel of St. Louis, in the right wing of the Franciscan church, the bodies of King Charles X of France, the duke and duchess d'Angouleme and the duchess of Parma had their resting place until 1883, when they were removed to a large vault under the high altar.

In this vault there are six sarcophagi, three on each side of a marble crucifix, raised on a high pedestal. Charles X has the duke d'Angouleme on his right and the duchess on his left.

In the other group the sarcophagus of King Henry V (the count de Chambord) has been placed between those of the countess de Chambord and the duchess of Parma.

On a black marble slab behind the sarcophagus of the count de Chambord is the following inscription: "Here rests the high born and very excellent Prince Henry, fifth of the name, by the grace of God king of France and Navarre. Born in Paris, September 29, 1820. Died at Frohsdorf August 24, 1883."

Over his tomb is raised an immense white banner emblazoned with the royal fleur de lis, in compliance with the order given by the count in his manifesto of July 5, 1871, where he expressed a wish "that the standard of Henry IV, of Francis I and of Joan of Arc, which had floated over his cradle, should also throw its shadow over his tomb."

Start the year by getting Hanford's Balsam. You will find frequent use for it. Adv.

Federal Inquiry or Railroad Strike?

Faced by demands from the conductors, engineers, firemen and brakemen that would impose on the country an additional burden in transportation costs of $100,000,000 a year, the railroads propose that this wage problem be settled by reference to an impartial Federal tribunal.

With these employees, whose efficient service is acknowledged, the railroads have no differences that could not be considered fairly and decided justly by such a public body.

Railroads Urge Public Inquiry and Arbitration

The formal proposal of the railroads to the employes for the settlement of the controversy is as follows:

"Our conferences have demonstrated that we cannot harmonize our differences of opinion and that eventually the matters in controversy must be passed upon by other and disinterested agencies. Therefore, we propose that your proposals and the proposition of the railways be disposed of by one or the other of the following methods:

1. Preferably by submission to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the only tribunal which, by reason of its accumulated information bearing on railway conditions and its control of the revenue of the railways, is in a position to consider and protect the rights and equities of all the interests affected, and to provide additional revenue necessary to meet the added cost of operation in case your proposals are found by the Commission to be just and reasonable; or, in the event the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot, under existing laws, act in the premises, that we jointly request Congress to take such action as may be necessary to enable the Commission to consider and promptly dispose of the questions involved; or
2. By arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the Federal law" (The Newlands Act).

Leaders Refuse Offer and Take Strike Vote

Leaders of the train service brotherhoods, at the joint conference held in New York, June 1-15, refused the offer of the railroads to submit the issue to arbitration or Federal review, and the employes are now voting on the question whether authority shall be given these leaders to declare a nation-wide strike.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is proposed by the railroads as the public body to which this issue ought to be referred for these reasons:

No other body with such an intimate knowledge of railroad conditions has such an unquestioned position in the public confidence.

The rates the railroads may charge the public for transportation are now largely fixed by this Government board.

Out of every dollar received by the railroads from the public nearly one-half is paid directly to the employes as wages; and the money to pay increased wages can come from no other source than the rates paid by the public.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, with its control over rates, is in a position to make a complete investigation and render such decision as would protect the interests of the railroad employes, the owners of the railroads, and the public.

A Question For the Public to Decide

The railroads feel that they have no right to grant a wage preferment of $100,000,000 a year to these employes, now highly paid and constituting only one-fifth of all the employes, without a clear mandate from a public tribunal that shall determine the merits of the case after a review of all the facts.

The single issue before the country is whether this controversy is to be settled by an impartial Government inquiry or by industrial warfare.

Michelin Tire Hints

Using the Brakes and Clutch.

George Rose of Rose Bros. Garage, local selling agent for the Michelin Tire Company says that the effects of sudden use of the brakes day after day is bound to damage tires by wearing the tread too fast and straining the beads and side walls. The layers of canvas in the casings are thus overtaxed, and little by little reach the breaking point. Brakes should always be applied gently, and unless it is absolutely necessary to pull up your car within a short distance, the car should be stopped as gradually as possible.

Another important point in driving is the proper manipulation of the clutch. In starting never slip in the clutch suddenly, with a jerk, but quietly and easily, in this way protecting the mechanism of the car as well as the tires.

Corners should always be taken carefully at reduced speed, regulating the speed to round the turn with little or no use of brakes. As a last word, it should always be remembered that tires are rubber and canvas, and not steel, and that to get the maximum tire service the tires should be treated properly.

The car is hard to get, because the demand is far greater than production, proves its desirability. It's a "Dodge". Bert Randall, Centerville, sells them. adv.
